train, to be used by the Boston & and winter months on the highways Maine Railroad as the latest of several motor units for experiments looking to improvements and economies in passenger operation, has just arrived at the Mechanicsville (N. YA) yards. The new equipment, essentially a unit for main line transportation, will be tried first on the run between North Adams and Troy, N. Y., displacing steam passenger trains. It will begin service at Troy about March 15.

This rail motor train has a capacof 82 passengers. Thirty are carried in the motorcar, which also has a large baggage compartment, and 52 will have seats in the trailer coach. The train is equipped with electric starting and lighting sys-tems. Seats are of the comfortable railroad coach type

Operating Cost Lessened

A considerable saving in cost of operation as compared with steam service is looked for, according to the road's announcement, but it is emphasized that the field for this type of equipment is limited to lines having a substantial volume of passenger traffic, with a sufficient freight movement also to justify the costs of track maintenance. Lines of light passenger travel, on which freight traffic is insufficient to pay for track maintenance, constitute a distinct problem, it was added.

"On lines of this description the inherent track maintenance costs, together with the minimum expense of offset by the scanty revenues available. It was on such lines of extremely light traffic and heavy losses that the Boston & Maine recently petitioned the Interstate Commerce Commission for discontinuance, in the belief that where any organized was warranted motorbusses on the highways offered the only means of making both ends meet. "This new equipment is the third motor unit to be operated by the Boston & Maine Railroad recently in March 13. Gardner E. ### LOUDEN OVERHEAD CARRYING EQUIPMENT

Old methods involving wasteful em-ployment of man-power for lifting and carrying work have been exposed as insidious profit-wasters by Louden Monorail. With this active material handling equipment one man quickly and easily lifts and conveys loads weighing up to 2000 lbs. from machine to machine, department to department and from one floor to another.

It is handling material of all kinds, from chinaware to molten metal. Savings effected by Louden Monorali in time, labor, floor space, rehandling expense, breakage, etc., are all out of proportion to its moderate cost.

C. Except for a large brick kiln, one saw nothing different or interesting about the place until a smiling into business from clay he studied. He had traveled in gabout the place until a smiling into business of Jacob Dvorsak, the story of his life.

To announce that pecause of encounting different sales he had given up his work at the Clayton pottery. His dream was coming true, and at last he was to have a pottery of his own, where unmolested he could work out his life ideals. His picked up ideas. Whatever was made from tree to tree so fast they appeared to be flying. Still others agreement and recent sales he had given up his work at the Clayton pottery. His dream was coming true, but dead not know what to do. Everything he thought of doing seemed too tame. The other elephants appeared too tame. The other elephants appeared too tame. They all talk alke. They all talk alke. They all had never before seen any kind but had never oung man emerged from the open floor, greeted one very cordially, said that he was Jacob Dvorsak, and that he would show one the souvenirs.

His old-country hospitality immediately charmed his guest, who fol-lowed him into the nearest one-room structure, which he called his workshop. There, in heterogeneous stacks over all the room, were quantities of lovely cream-colored pottery. On most of it a dark blue color had been put on the top and let run down until blended into the creamy background. In every cup and every bowl one could trace the expression of art. With no outside inspiration, nothing but that inward urge of the artist to express himself he had built his uses, built his tools, machines, and brick by brick had constructed the huge kiln. He had taken the raw clay, molded it, sun-dried it, and cut of it made these interesting dishes and pots and crocks which stood in profusion about us.

Building the Plant

Yet interest centered, not around the beautiful pottery, but about the man, the artist who had made these things possible. In the six years that he had lived on his little 17-acre tract, few persons had been attracted by the sign. "Jacob Dvorsak, Souvenirs." However, his days were full. He worked at the Clayton pot tery in the daytime, and in the after hours worked on his own establishment. He built his houses, cleared his land, constructed his kiln, and last but not least made for himself little formal garden where he could sit among the pines and rest.

Just why he had chosen this seemingly lonely, out of the way place, which to establish himself, was difficult to see, but he pointed out the railroad track, a branch of the Great Northern. His idea was to get to Clayton, and at the same time be on a sidetrack of the railroad. He had laid his plans wall. Sure enough there was the sidetrack, and about 100 feet down the main track the station sign, "Christiaanson."

DRY LAW HERE TO STAY, SAYS MRS. WILLEBRANDT

Prohibition Effective in Greater Part of Nation, She Tells Forum in Boston—Declares Local Politics in "Reluctant Spots" Shields "Big Violators"

Declaring that the American! people are fundamentally in favor of prohibition and that the exceptional violations in a single section are permitted to misrepresent the more general support and uniformly effective operation of the law throughout the greater part of the country Mrs. assured a large audience at the Old South Meeting House forum in Boston yesterday that the dry law is here to stay and that its benefits will be realized in an increasing measure. Mrs. Willebrandt, who arrived in Boston Saturday from Washington by airplane, discussed the subject, "Is Prohibition Going or Coming?" and she made it clear that she had no doubt but that better prohibition everywhere along the line was decidedly "coming."

Issue of Loyalty

Obedience to the Eighteenth Amendment, Mrs. Willebrandt said, is no longer a matter of individual opinion, but an issue of sound citizenship and loyalty to the Gov-ernment. She added that it was a question, "On which side do you stand? Are you for or against the Constitution?"

While emphasizing the need of increasing diligence in enforcing the SEEN IN SURVEY OF MARKETS statute everywhere, the speaker de-clared that in two-thirds of the country it was enforced equally as well as every other law. The Eighteenth Amendment is here to stay. It will never be repealed.

Most prohibitionists and antiprohibitionists admit that. The simple issue then arises whether we will align ourselves with carrying out that Constitutional policy, or on the side of graft and evasion of it. And Americans won't long remain abettors of corruption and national hypocrisy. Yet, those who try to justify evasion of the law because they disbelieve in the law, or because they want to serve liquor because they like it, or because it is daring and expensive, are refusing to think straight on the question They may be otherwise good peo-ple; many of them are socially prominent, but they do not see the Willebrandt from the floor following her address as to what she would say to those who honestly believe that prohibition legislation wrong. She expressed the opinion that they have the right to voice that belief provided they do not violate the law or encourage others to do so.

Answering another inquiry con cerning how to get rid of dishonest enforcement agents, she urged that the searchlight of publicity be fothemselves be willing to protest.

The Painter's Development The paintings run chronologically from the first simple, almost experimental notations to the final complex and multiple-mooded masterpieces. The gradual increase in power of pictorial thought and command of medium is remarkable From the first painting listed in the catalogue—the "Sigh," an easy vistoning of a passing moment in soft gray swirling tones-to the four startling embodiments of the last line of the Lord's Prayer that end the tour of the gallery, a cumulative sense of the artist's ranging powers is felt at each stage. The primary passages of the first paintings are turned into symphonic outpourings before the climax of the show is reached. ### As a School Hobby Nature Study Is Freely Enjoyed

London, Eng.
Special Correspondence
OU may occasionally find nature study written down as a subject in the curriculum of an elementary school-and that is what it too often remains, just a subject, a thing formal and external, altogether apart from the life and experience of the children. It is like the old object lesson happily almost forgotten now, but once so constant a favorite with the inspector. Yet na-ture study, if handled with real sympathy and enthusiasm, as a hobby rather than as a lesson, can be perhaps more humanizing and be perhaps more humanizing and educative in the best sense, particularly in a rural school, than almost to show her own ignorance and to learn with her pupils. I suggest that we keep the proach. This principal was a wise man who understood the discrepancles that often appear in the actions of a boy and he never committed himself until the evidence was all in. He sent for the father, another wise man and one of large affairs. The consultation left no reasonable doubt as to Robert's guilt, although they could find no apparent motive back of the petty pilfering. The boy's allowance was liberal and had an emergency need for school material arisen, his popularity would have been an open sesame to borrowing.

Robert was next taken into the conference. Without hesitation he admitted that he was the offender, dicated on the variously colored sec- but he was as much at a loss as the tions. conquest." Robert looked up in wide-eyed, wondering gratitude. The three men, for Robert on the instant rose to man's estate, joined hands upon the agreement of secrecy and in pledge of final victory.

Robert moved without suspicion among his comrades. Knowing that father and principal were his friends, his confidence in himself was strengthened. Pencils, paper and all property of others never again were in danger from Robert. His popularity in the school steadily increased, until he became an acknowledged leader. He was a fine athlete, excelling in football. He went to college and became one of the finest quarterbacks the college team ever had. He was graduated with honor and immediately went into his father's business. Today he is one of the leading business men of his own city, filling positions of private and civic trust.

All this probably never would have happened had he not fortunately had father and teacher who knew how to turn evil into a shadowy myth.

NEW YORK, March 9 (Special)— The steel makers are still waiting in a state of expectancy for the so-called spring buying movement to begin.
Unless an improvement in the volume of orders takes mace within the next few weeks the operating rate will be curtailed and prices will not hold. However, almost without exception the steel makers are looking for a substantial movement.
Operations of the United States Steel Corporation have reached 94 per cent of capacity, and the industry as a whole is going at an 89 per cent of capacity, and the industry as a whole is going at an 89 per cent pace. Generally speaking, mills located at Pittsburgh and all points west report that February orders exceeded those in January. In the east, the volume lagged behind.
Almost all companies noted a slackening of demand the last week of February and the first week of March, but that is only normal for this season of the year. state of expectancy for the so-called

The price advances which were announced in January for second quarter have not become established. In fact, consumers begin to doubt whether they will be. Therefore they are awaiting developments, which adds to the present dullness.

Sheet Prices Weak

Sheet Prices Weak

Steel sheets have shown actual weakness. Full finished sheets, which are used in making automobile bodies, have sold as low as 4.40c a pound, Pittsburgh, whereas the price was supposedly 4.75c, but actually no higher than 4.60c. Black sheets have sold as low as 3.30c, with the supposed price, 3.50c.

Jobbers have been stocking up with various grades of steel in preparation for the expected spring buying, ordering from 200 to 500 tons of a grade. They are inclined to snop considerably, especially since they find prices higher than when they previously stocked up. Thus, they found plates 1.70c a pound when they last bought, but now they are asked to pay 2.10c.
Pig iron production in February was Pig iron production in February was the largest for that month in history and was exceeded only by four other months (in 1923) as to daily rate. The daily rate of gain over January was There was a net increase of five active stacks. Pig iron production is now at 62½ per cent of theoretical capacity, which is considerably higher capacity, which is considerably higher than normal.

The daily rate last month was 114,791 tons, compared with 108,720 tons in January. Total furnaces in blast are 254. Total February output was 3,214,143 tons. The annual production rate on March 1 was 42,200,000 tons.

Foreign Competition

Additional sales of foreign iron and steel came to light during the last week. Some steel companies' sales representatives have been talking informally on how best to combat the influx of foreign finished iron and steel products. steel products.

They object particularly to municipalities purchasing foreign material, thus failing to set an example of patriotism to the private consumers. They point out that foreign material undersells the American because of lower wage standards abroad.

The city of Oneida, N. Y., just bought 12,000 tons of cast iron pipe from a French maker, and public utility companies in New Jersey purchased about 2000 tons. French pipe continues to sell into New England.

Engineers for a project at New York requiring 6500 tons of reinforcing bars were on the point of buying foreign steel when some pressure was brought to bear so that the contract was not completed. Jobbers along the Atlantic seaboard have been buying FLUCTUATIONS

QUIET WEEK REPORTED IN SHOE MARKETS

Ladies' Low Cuts Feature Buying-Patent Leather Demand Good

The most gratifying feature relating to conditions in the shoe manufacturing districts is the growing demand for ladies' low cut footwear, which has assumed proportions quite normal in character.

Ordinarily leaders of the shoe in-Ordinarily leaders of the shoe industry, not participating in this improved activity, would look for a widening of the demand until all grades of shoes were included in the trade betterment now enjoyed by those specializing in modish footwear, but the broadening of new business is of slow development.

Despite a better tone here and there, the call for men's shoes is remarkably call for men's shoes is remarkably the call for men's shoes is remarkably backward, ranging from every day street shoe up to the finer qualities. As such footwear is not handicapped by prices beyond the limit of reasonableness, the absence of orders of volume is a puzzling question to many merchants.

I have not come to arrange for a loan, nor is there any question for the moment of placing large orders in England for the Rumanian railways or other industries. The object of my visit is to give and receive information which may preserve the of my visit is to give and receive information which may prepare the ground for closer collaboration between the two countries in the industrial and financial sphere. My great aim is to create that confidence in Rumania which I am convincéd would exist if ignorance or prejudice as to our laws or institutions did not stand in the way.

Armed with pemphiate and standard formation with pemphiate and standard in the way.

Armed with pamphlets and statistics Mr. Bratianu has visited the Board of Trade and interviewed Austen Chamberlain, the British Foreign Secretary. He had arranged to see Mr. Churchill, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, before he left. He had also talked to bankers and financiers in pursuit of his desire to create an of confidence which should lead to business.

Being in the main an agricultural state it cannot find the money itself. It looks therefore to England and America for help. Mr. Bratianu continued:

But while anxious to obtain this assistance the Rumanian Government is determined to keep control of its undeveloped wealth, and for that undeveloped wealth, and for that purpose proposes a scheme of col-laboration with foreign capital for the exploitation of the mineral wealth. For this reason the mining

The scheme that the Rumanian Government proposes as best suited for the collaboration of foreign capital in the development of the mineral wealth of the country is that of a special type of limited company promoted by the State and by Rumanian and foreign private capital, the majority on the board of directors to represent Rumanian state and private capital in Rumania itself.

This has been objected to as placmania itself.

This has been objected to as placing foreign capital under Rumanian control, but the law does not concern companies which are formed to exploit private properties, such as the oil lands belonging to private individuals, over which the rights of the State have been suspended for 50 years owing to the vested rights of the present legal owners. Existing oil companies are allowed to extend their operations over such lands.

Mr. Bratianu went on to explain

Mr. Bratianu went on to explain that, under their present Constitu-tion, the Rumanian Government proposes to apply the same system of limited partnership to state enterprises in mines, forests, fisheries, metallurgical works, steamship com-panies and other industries. He continued:

In the development of the railways there is an immense field for the co-operation of foreign capital. Rumania may in fact be said to be only at the beginning of her railway system, for in a country as big as the United Kingdom she has only 12,000 kilometers of railways. Over both the public and private railways the Rumanian Government will keep a general supervision while inviting foreign loans.

Mr. Bratianu assured the Monitor representative that the relations of Rumania with its neighbors were excellent. The Balkan states have entered into commercial treaties with each other which facilitate the exchange of goods. He does not consider an economic federation of the states under a Zollverein possible. But gradually the tariff walls are being lowered. As regards Russia, he said, "there is no danger of Communism rising in Rumania, which is mainly a country of peasant propri-etors." Nor does he see any danger of the peace being disturbed in Bessarabia, the province which was restored to Rumania, after being Russian for two centuries.

Mr. Bratiany denied that there was any persecution of her minori-ties by Rumania. As regards the unrest in Bessarabia and the Hungarian complaints of the oppression from which the Magyars of Transylvania suffer under Rumanian rule, he said that the League of Nations have sent commissions to inquire Although the progress of the country will be slower than it might no discrimination in the treatment otherwise be if Rumanian wealth in of the populations which were and after two trials the Pennsylvania athlete soared cleanly over the bar for the best indoor record ever made in competition.

Just before this, the two-mile relay race had resulted in a victory for the four runners representing Georgetown. In this, they broke their own recent record of a Mas. by running the two miles in 7m. 41.8s. The team is composed of E. J. Swinburne 27. E. M. Brooks 25, J. C. Holden 25, and G. M. Marsters 25, and ran in that order. Marsters was especially effective in the anchor position, and ran away from F. H. McCloskey 27. Boston College, who brought his batton in second.

The 70-yard high hurdles record for indoor intercollegiates was also lowered by the same hurdler who made that year. C. H. Moore, of Pennsylvania, which were deep the same hurdler who made the distance twice in 8.6s., and then won the event in 8.8s. Three ests of heats were required in this, and Moore's times were 8.6 in the preliminaries, 8.7 in the second round, 8.6 in the semifinals, and 8.8 in the finals, a truly remarkable performance. The previous record was 9s.

A. H. Miller 27. Harvard, won the 70-yard sprint event, after a long series of victories in the earlier heats. His times were 7.3s., 7.4, 7.4 in the semifinals, and 8.2 in the finals, 6. L. Hill 25, Pennsylvania, was second, and G. L. Mittelsdorf 27 of Colby, third.

The 35-pound weight throw was held in the afternoon at the Squadron A Armory, and went to the other Colby star, K. Wentworth 25, who threw the missile 52it 4%in., just failing to equal the record made by F. D. Tootell. 52ft. 9¼in., two years ago.

Team Beats Wales

PITTSBURGH. March 9—Joseph Moore of New York successfully defended his international indoor speed-skating title Saturday night, scoring a total of 150 points in the two-night international indoor ice skating meet at Duquesne Gardens.

Three world records were shattered. The two-mile record for men was broken by Moore when he sped overthat ice for that distance in 5m. 58 2-5s. The former record was held by Charles Fisher, who made the distance in 6m. 17s. on the same rink, Feb. 29, 1916.

The two other records were broken in from Monitor Bureau London, March 9—Meerton Abbey. England's field hockey team, gave a brilliant exhibition of the game here Saturday when it defeated Wales 10 to 4. The losers fought gallantly—as a matter of fact they have never scored so many goals against England before—but were outclassed at every point, especially at halfback. To describe the scoring in details is scarcely possible here.

England was 2 goals up in the first three minutes and thereafter broke through to score at regular intervals. PITTSRURGH March 9-Joseph By Radio from Monitor Bureau

OTTAWA, Ont., March 9 (Special)-

Feeling a great desire to help your effort to "ciean up hockey" and eliminate the needless rough play that at present is a threat to the national game, and also to leave a tangible record of the enjoyment I personally have had from the game during our solourn in Canada, I am writing to ask if you will let me offer a challenge cup for the man en any team in the National Hockey League who, while being thoroughly effective, is also a thoroughly clean player.

I am convinced that the public desires good sport, not the injuring of payers, and if by donating this challenge cup I can in any way help towards this end, it will give me a great deal of pleasure.

Question Box

350. I have been watching with interest the results obtained with the Browning-Drake regenaformer set. I have built several neutrodyne sets and now am desirous of building the Browning-Drake set. Before doing so, however, I would appreciate a little information.

In the Sept. 22-24 edition describing the layout I note the panel, that is, the upper part is 5x22 inches and the depth of the cabinet is 8 inches. I have a cabinet that measures inside 7x7x25% inches; no doubt the height (7 inches) would be all right.

Question I. Will the depth (7 inches) accommodate the parts satisfactorily. accommodate the parts satisfactorily my cabinet being 25% inches long inside 3% inches longer than the one speci-

Question 2. Would there be any advantage or disadvantage in spacing the parts farther apart than the panel lay-out specifies? out specifies?

I have a list of parts from the L. & H. Radio Agency for the set, which lists two General Radio audio transformers. Question 2. Are the General Radio audio transformers as efficient as any that you know of?

The list above referred to includes General Radio 10 and 20 ohm rheo-stats.

Question 4. Would there be any advantage in substituting Bradleystats?
I also note (referring to the description in the Sept. 22-24 article) "Suggestions as to tuning, etc."
Question 5. Is the finger test for the "pluck" a regular feature of the tuning or is it just a matter of neutralizing or is it just a matter of neutralizing after the set has been assembled?
I also note that there are six distinct operations in the tuning above referred to.

FOR SALE—Areata, Humbolt Co., Calif.—New, modern 6-room stucco house: newly, beautifully furnished; 15 acres; 230 young tive treative forms, wild winters; always green; in Redwood belt on Redwood State Highway: 3 blocks from State Teachers and Junior College; completely furnished; price $12,000.

N. B. VAN MATRE, Box 884 Reference, Bank of Arcata.

operations in the tuning above referred to.

Question 6. Do I interpret the tuning correctly or, in short, what is necessary, ordinarily, in tuning this set?

Recently I read the advertisements of a number of firms making audio transformers; all had the "best," most efficient, less distortion, best tone amplification, best performances, etc. There must be some difference.

Question 7. Can you consistently advise what, in your judgment, is really the best?

Referring to the input tuning unit Lo and Cl of the Browning-Drake set, I see quite a lot recently about the low loss coil, the basket weave, for instance.

Question 8. Would a basket-weave coil well made add anything to the performance of this set?

Question 9. To adapt the sloping panel to this receiver, what would thinside dimensions have to be?

W. E. Le, Connersville, Ind.

(Ans.) Your present cabline, may be adapted to the "cowning-Drake receiver."

inside dimensions have to be.

W. E. L., Connersville, Ind.

(Ans.) Your present cabine, may be adapted to the 'cowning-Drake receiver. The depth will just accommedate the condenser and coils of the regular kit, as they are slightly under seven inches from the panel to the back of the coils. The panel layout, shown in pictorial form in more recent issues than the one you have, shows the parts on a 24-inch panel. We would advise this as the minimum length, with the usual lineur of parts. The agency you speak of has generally adopted the Samson 3 to 1 in their equipment, as these transformers showed up unusually well in recent tests at Harvard University. The new General Radio transformers costing $7, are far superior to the older type, but they are good for use in only one stage, the first, Bradleystats work out very nicely, although I do not believe any particular advantage is gained outside of their extranely smooth operation. The finger test is merely for the purpose of neutralization. The tuning notes discussed are necessary in tuning the set. They are really most natural purpose of neutralization. The tuning this set. They are really most natural moves and are not as complicated as they would seem. Any audio transformer that has a high number of turns in the primary and plenty of iron in the will prove to be a good transformer. The basket-weave cell is a detriment more than a help. We cannot answer your question on the sloping panel, there it all depends upon the amount of eone and mane other variable features. a case of individual design

Somewhat unostentatiously, but none the less effectively, an organization known as the National Exchange Club, with representatives in many of the states, is conducting a needed educational campaign against the tendency, both in Congress and in state legislatures, to make confusion more confounded by the enactment of many laws. The basis of this campaign is the reasonable theory that it would benefit all concerned to provide fewer and better laws, and then to compel absolute observance of them, than to attempt by legislation to regulate and control humanity through edicts and statutes of only questionable reasonableness.

The Multiplicity of Laws

Under the prevailing American practice of lawmaking, every elected member of the houses of Congress, as well as of the several state legislatures, seems inclined to the belief that during his term of office he must initiate and sponsor one or more original measures, and that only by so doing can he identify himself to the voters in his district as one who is deeply concerned in their behalf. The process, thus amplified, assumes tremendous and ominous proportions. New sections, new chapters, and new volumes are added to the weighty tomes which contain the "thou shalts" and the "thou shalt nots" couched in the cumbersome phraseology which sometimes tends to mislead and confuse those willing but unable to obey.

Among members of bar associations, and among writers and commentators on the law, it has been proposed that the task be undertaken of revising and recodifying, as it were, the vast volume of decisions rendered by appellate courts during the last few centuries, the purpose being to eliminate from them those precedents now overruled or no longer followed by either English or American jurists. A somewhat similar process applied in the matter of disputed ownership in lands or estates is called "quieting the title." By the method it is possible, the right of contesting claimants having been settled, to start from an ascertained point by agreeing that the record as completed shall constitute constructive notice to all future purchasers of the actual status of the subject matter involved.

Occasionally similar effort is made by legislative enactment delegating to a commission the power to revise and rewrite the laws of a state, the revised statutes thereafter being enacted as a whole, the intention being to supplement all previous scattering or conflicting laws. But it is impossible by such a process to repeal any effective enactment. There must remain, until specifically nullified by the lawmaking authority, all acts then in force. The condition has thus been somewhat clarified, but it has not been actually remedied. There is a wise course to be pursued in an effort such as that which has been undertaken to arouse an enlightened public sentiment in support of a movement which will lead to better conditions along the line emphasized. It is hoped that those thus enlisted will follow such a course. The end sought cannot safely be gained, however, by arousing antagonism to the law, or by any teaching or propaganda that | basis. The fact, that is, that there is no "emowill tend to lessen the respect of the American tional campaign" for higher wages being conpeople for the established order. The trouble ducted at present, combined with many indicais not with the methods and fundamentals, but | tions of prosperity which are noticeable, is with the processes resorted to by ambitious legislators, clothed with brief and temporary delegated authority.

It is not a reasonable contention, for instance, that the familiar adage, "Ignorance of the law excuses no man," should be reversed and that offenses should be condoned because the laws are so many that no one can be charged with the knowledge of their existence. Law, in its broader significance, is specific enough, and universal enough, to command obedience without an intimate familiarity with every statutory inhibition. In the consciences of those who seek to obey there is written a universal code, ethical if you will, but none the less compelling, which needs no frequent revision. It is not difficult to obey the law.

But with the convincing realization that this more general code does exist, and that it will continue throughout all time to exist, there becomes more apparent the understanding that much that assumes the form of law lacks the substance of the law. It is against this vain and senseless multiplicity of enactments that a reasonable and successful campaign can be waged.

Perseverance on the part of active social workers throughout the Dominion, supported by members with progressive views in the House of Commons, is gradually mobilizing public opinion in Canada to suppress the business of betting. W. C. Good, M. P., came back again this session with a resolution to apply the criminal code to betting at race meetings as it is applied to gaming houses everywhere else in the Dominion. He asked Parliament to declare that public gambling as it is at present carried on at race meetings is "detrimental to the best interests of Canada and should be abolished."

The majority of members were unwilling to go the whole length of Mr. Good's resolution, but they did support an amendment which is a step in the right direction. By a vote of 108 to 74, the House called upon the Government to introduce legislation this session "to prohibit the advertising, publishing, broadcasting, printing or sale of information concerning any tips, selections, odds, or any similar intelligence with respect to or applicable to horse-racing, whether held within Canada or without, unless where supplied on a race track in Canada during the course of a race meeting legally held." While it still leaves race-track gambling exempt from the law against betting as a business, the proposed measure should tend to make it more difficult to carry on handbook betting, which is the title given to an illegal form of gambling at present in vogue in some Canadian cities. The handbook business is to gamble on races at distant places, such as some of the notorious race tracks in the United States. News of the results at race meetings abroad is published in certain newspapers, also other particulars that are required for illegal gambling purposes. It is probable that the suppression of this information from race tracks would be favored by leading Canadian newspapers: it is printed at present because of the belief that the papers would otherwise be handicapped in competition with some imported sheets from south of the boundary line. One effect of the proposed measure may be to bar out of Canada all papers that print betting news. As public opinion is almost unanimously against handbook betting, presumably the Canadian people would be prepared to deprive themselves of the privilege of reading those American journals which still regard gambling items as part of the essential service of a daily newspaper. .

Members from various parts of the Dominion expressed themselves in the recent debate in the House of Commons as hostile to the business of betting. One Quebec member on the Government's side, J. J. Denis, stated that in the year 1924, $62,000,000 had been wagered in Canada on race tracks. A new Liberal member from New Brunswick, W. B. Snowball, expressed the view of many people when he described gambling as insidious, like the liquor habit. Robert Forke, Progressive leader from Manitoba, while opposing race-track gambling, also condemned wheat gambling. He described both as bad "in principle and in practice."

The increased exploitation of the public by gambling organizations must ultimately tend to stir up Canadian opinion to the point of demanding complete eradication of the business.

In urging that teachers' salaries should be raised to a "living, saving and cultural wage,"

Teachers and a Living Wage as a business proposition for the public good, William McAndrew, superintendent of Chicago schools, while really not propounding any sentiment which should strike one as strange doctrine, yet, it must be acknowledged, struck a somewhat novel keynote. It has for so long been considered almost axiomatic that the unselfish devotion to duty which characterizes the work of many teachers is something to be taken for granted, and not something which actually merits exceptional compensation, that Mr. McAndrew's point of view may appear almost heretical to some. Yet, at the last analysis, it is extremely difficult to see the justice or reasonableness of expecting from one class of the citizenry a standard of excellence and self-sacrifice which is hardly even thought of in connection with most other lines of occupation.

Mr. McAndrew's recommendations for salary increases for the teachers of Chicago are of especial interest because they come at a time when the teachers are not asking for such themselves, while a considerable deficit exists in the city's educational fund. One readily appreciates, however, that his contention, that for this very reason the present is an especially suitable time for such an upward adjustment of the salaries, is not without a substantial more than sufficient reason, in his opinion, to warrant action in the immediate future.

The first conclusion reported by Mr. McAndrew is particularly significant, as marking a higher standard attained in connection with public education. The purpose of a salary schedule, it reads, is to secure service and not to please employees. And yet, it continues, an adequate living for a married man with a family must be the basis of pay necessary to attract the highest class of service. It is hardly necessary to call attention to the fact that in the past something quite different from this ideal has as a general rule held sway in determining the salary feature of the American educational system.

One cannot help but feel a certain satisfaction in learning that, according to Mr. McAndrew, the "lack of funds" is not as real as it appears. So frequently is this the case, in similar circumstances, however, that by now it ought to be commonly recognized that such a cry is as often as not more fiction than fact. If there is money enough for other phases of civic necessity, and there generally is, there, certainly should be also for the great work of education. If there does not seem to be, it would not be amiss emphatically to ask the reason why. And it is not going beyond the realm of probability to say that, in the majority of cases, an unbiased inquiry would establish a similar finding to that which Mr. McAndrew assures the Chicago Board of Education is true in that city, namely, that the shortage is "only apparent."

Many reasonable and thoughtful people in the United States who have given, as they insist, considerate and perhaps unbiased study to the subject of the en-Where forcement, or lack of Responsienforcement, of the national prohibition law, bility Restshave had occasion to deplore the indisputable fact that since the enactment of the law, or more specifically since the launching of a concerted effort by powerful agencies to effect a popular nullification thereof, there has been an appreciable increase, in some quarters, in indulgence by young men and young women, and by boys and girls, at social dances and other functions. This tendency is proclaimed by the advocates of modification or nullification as an argument against prohibition. It is not. The fault is not that of the law, but of those who have themselves condoned or encouraged its open violation. The fault, in the final analysis, is not that of the young people who thus offend. Strictly it is that of parents or guardians who, by their own careless example or by their failure to maintain reasonable restraint upon those for whose conduct they must reasonably be expected to answer, permit these practices to continue. It is a specious and untenable plea to insist that it is not within the power of parents and guardians to put an end to these abuses of which they are frequently the first to complain.

The methods by which such reasonable and wholesome discipline may be enforced are obvious. First of all, there should not be the temptation of a vicious or careless example. It is to this influence, apparently, that most of the trouble may be traced. Indulgent parents who have sought to make light of the law by permitting liquors to be served to their guests, who have humorously referred to their familiar dealings with criminals serving as confidential bootleggers, and who are willing to concede that prohibition is meant only as a curb upon the depraved appetites of addicts, will sometime be awakened to a realization that they are trifling with an enemy.

The warning is not sounded by alarmists. To apply a famous phrase, it is a condition, and not a theory, that confronts the American home today. Sons and daughters of parents who in their youth would have resented as an insult the proffer of a pocket flask are indulging in dangerous practices under the delusion that they must do as others in their chosen circle are doing. The mother who permits a daughter to continue in this unwomanly yielding to a false social standard must not blame the law. No human code has ever been enacted that cannot be violated. No moral law remains unbroken.

Art is the upspringing testimony of the artist's sense of reality. It is his deep enthusiasm for

the real that prompts him to attempt to record facts beyond the ken of the physical senses, and in the quality of his approach toward the varied phenomena comprising human existence lies the keynote of his

art. It may be deep, diverting, drab, or gay, as the case may be; it may be ardent, alert, and eager, and yet it may be unimportant as such things are reckoned. The familiar declaration that many are called and but few are chosen holds true in art. And this because in the strictest sense of the word an eager approach is not enough. Without a basic significance all the fine flourishing of implements, intentions, and dicta are but a passing show.

This burning question of subject matter in art receives a pertinent answer in the exhibition of symbolic paintings by Walter Beck now at the Grand Central Galleries in New York City. Here, in almost unparalleled diversity, is set forth a pictorial point of view that is as crammed with rich material as was Jack Horner's famous' pie. Most every time this painter puts his brush to paper he gets his pictorial plum. It is idea that this American symbolist stresses very nearly to the exclusion of representation, yet in the fullness of his meaning each idea manages to exist a concrete and vital thing, evocative and refreshingly stimulating. The exhibition stands a vivid challenge to the twentieth century demand for significance in art, a flashing signal of alertness to the modern urge for independent æsthetic thought and action.

Today the fine arts are passing through probably the most sensational stage of transition they have ever entered upon. In line with the dynamic development of modern thought and invention, the field of art is being harrowed and digged for deeper planting. Buried models are being held up as new delights, patchwork innovations are hailed with sudden rapture; so eager is the desire for new art that any little growth of tender shoot is fenced about with all the solemnity of Arbor Day. But all this reworking of the soil is for the coming harvest, that twentieth century flowering of artistic thought which is to bring forth a new manifestation of beauty. It is an encouraging sign along the way that such a man as Walter Beck appeared with his burgeoning art. He has apparently taken time by the forelock and advanced the cause of modern art by several notches. His work may be discomforting to the conservatists, may not fit in with the plans of the theorists. But whateyer else it may be, it is uniquely honest, illuminating, and significant.

Editorial Notes

It is reasonable to conclude that an opinion expressed by Lord Justice Andrews at the opening of the Belfast City Commission represents a true state of affairs. Hence what he said the other day on that occasion is worthy of more than passing comment. There never existed in Ireland, he assured his hearers, more cordial or friendly relations amongst those who differed from one another in their religious and political outlook than those which exist at the present day. That, probably, he continued, was not due to any weakening of the opinions or convictions which were held by the citizens, but rather to the growth and development of a spirit of toleration and forbearance which should be the aim of every good citizen to foster and encourage. And it is justifiable to add that the Irish problem, which has baffled statesmen for so many years and which has appeared to so many as virtually insolvable, will find its entire solution along just these very lines.

Despite assertions by wets that New Yorkers are unalterably and unanimously opposed to prohibition, the statement by Emory R. Buckner, recently appointed United States Attorney, that "the police department alone during the last eight weeks has received 27,000 complaints of liquor violations," presents another view of the situation. It indicates strongly, that is, that a very substantial proportion of New York's citizens not only are not wet but are earnestly and enthusiastically supporting the Eighteenth Amendment. When so large a number of individuals voluntarily report violations of the Volstead Act within a period of two months, it should be obvious to all that the dry sentiment in New York is, to put it extremely mildly, certainly not on the wane.

American Ambassadors to Britain

By SIR ALFRED ROBBINS

The hoary-headed jest that "an ambassador is one who lies abroad for the benefit of his country," though it turns upon a misapprehension of one original meaning of a very old English word, only too faithfully represents misunderstanding in the minds of many ordinarily worthy folk as to the true mission of these great funcnaries. There is an idea in the Old World that diplo macy is a study of such subtle sublimity that none but those trained in it from official babyhood can have the least chance of success.

The New World, however, has taken the view that a man of affairs, having the welfare and interests of his country at heart, makes a better ambassador, because of bringing a fresh and alert intellect to bear on international problems, than one who is covered with the col webs of Foreign Office training. America, therefore, has been accustomed to choose as her leading representatives abroad public men who are amateurs in diplomacy.

Great Britain within the last twenty years has flattered America by imitating her example in respect to herself. No one is likely to dispute that the earliest amateur British Ambassador to America was a most marked success, for that was none other than James Bryce. And one has known in recent history trained diplomatists who have not represented Whitehall as effectively at Washington as such amateurs as Lord Reading and Sir Auckland Geddes. 4 4

These considerations are specially brought to mind at a moment when there is being effected a change of American ambassadorship to England. The newcomer to the London Embassy is nearly the fortieth in a strikdistinguished list of those accredited since the United States sprang into being as a Nation. A glance at that list will furnish proof that America from the set has paid England the compliment of sending of her very best-alike in public life, in law, and in letters-to represent her interests at St. James's.

A list that embraces future presidents like John Adams, who stands at its head, James Monroe, John Quincy Adams, Martin Van Buren, and James Buchanan; such great nublicists, dear to American memory, as Thomas Pinckney, Rufus King, Charles Francis Adams, Thomas F. Bayard, and Walter Hines Page: such men of law and letters as Edward Everett, George Bancroft, John Lothrop Motley, James Russell Lowell, John Hay, Joseph H. Choate, and John W. Davis is a catalogue of capacity and character not to be equaled by any similar of diplomatic representatives furnished by any single country in the whole world.

Among this striking series of statesmen, using the term in a specially high sense, some have been called on to face unusually difficult conditions. John Adams had a very delicate task to perform as the first American Minister to George III, after the winning of the War of Independence. His son, John Quincy Adams, had one scarcely less delicate when he came to London at the Peace of 1815 which ended the war of 1812. It fell to Charles Francis Adams, grandson of John and son of John Quincy, to be Ambassador during the third most perilous period of Anglo-American relationship, that of the Civil War of sixty years since, when the supreme issue of peace or war between the two countries hung at times on the slenderest thread.

4 4 4 Robert C. Schenck was not to be envied during his occupancy of the Embassy at the time of the Alabama Arbitration a decade later, while the anxieties of Walter Hines Page in the most perilous years of the Great War, before America came into the struggle, are too well remembered to need being retold London always has shown a special liking for the American ambassadors, regarding them often with speamerican ambassadors, regarding them often with ape-cial affection because of literary association, social amenity, or family relationship. In the time of those still living, Motley and Lowell and Hay were welcomed with unusual cordiality because of the literary association: Whitelaw Reid because of the social amenity. and Robert T. Lincoln because he was the son of his father and that father the great Abraham.

The extremely varied personal characteristics they presented appealed to the general sense of the British people, who, though they like pomp in its proper place, detest pomposity everywhere. These ministers made an appeal to vast classes of English folk who, in the ver-facular of the day, "have no use" for the solemn and oracular diplomatist. They appealed as living men and not as elegant automata, and they rendered their country the greater service because their style differed from the everyday diplomatist.

Of the American ambassadors of the present generation—a generation in the old sense of roughly thirtythree years—I have had the privilege to come into per-sonal contact with the majority. The first—though, in strictness, he was the last of the ministers, the ambassadors beginning with Bayard, whom President Cleveland appointed at the opening of his second term—was Robert Lincoln. The Emancipator's son, while making no great mark of his own, was a hearty, genial individual whom it was pleasant to meet.

Bayard was the most stately of all the American ambassadors I have encountered. He seemed always to be suffused with the idea that it was absolutely incumbent upon him to realize the model of his namesake, that im-mortal Chevalier who, in an age which sorely needed the example, was "sans peur et sans reproche." speeches were sonorous and ornate, and London audiences, unaccustomed to elaborate after-dinner oratory, sat in silent amaze as he rolled forth his prolonged

+ + + Choate-with all his great legal knowledge, which seemed to exude from rather than to be pressed into his speeches—had a touch of hearty humor that made even his most weighty deliverances human; and, taking him round, he was probably the best-liked personality

Whitelaw Reld appealed more to "society." His vast possessions aided his natural powers; and the temporary occupant of a splendid old mansion on the countryside within handy reach of London, as well as a fine house in town and the Embassy itself, was able to impress by social welcome as well as by mental power.

Page, to whom I was one of the hosts at the first cublic dinner he attended in England, seemed to give little promise at the outset of the great services he was to render during his tenure of the position; but, from the moment he was met, he was felt to have the root of the matter in him; and it is a proud recollection to have welcomed him so soon.

The remembrance of John W. Davis is equally dear to the many friends he made while in London and will always retain, his fine and quietly humorous oratory being as great a delight as his easy and informing con-

Of Mr. Kellogg, it is too soon to speak, for he has a future in the public life of his country which his brief experience as American Ambassador to England cannot fail to influence. But his geniality has impressed as much as his hard-headedness; and all who have met him wish him well. The whole long tale of American representatives to this country, indeed, and the way in which throughout they have been greeted, must furnish to the

The World's Great Capitals: The Week in Moscow

The revival of Griboyedov's classical play "Gorye ot Uma" (which may be literally, if clumsily, translated 'The Grief That Comes From Thought") at the Moscow Art Theater recently excited much popular interest. Looking over the front rows one could see many outstanding figures' in Soviet official life, including Premier Rykov, Bukharin, editor of Pravda, Assistant Commissar for Foreign Affairs Litvinov, Rakovsky, the Russian Ambassador to England and Yenukidze, Secretary of the All-Union Soviet Executive Committee. Three of the most distinguished actors in the Art Theater, Stanislavsky, Moskvin and Katchalov, took part in the perfermance play, which was written long ago, in the days of Pushkin and Tsar Nicholas I, depicts the revolt of a young student, who, has been abroad, against the artificialities and stupidities of provincial society life. It is written in verse and many of the lines have become household proverbs in Russia.

The Russian shipbuilding industry, which has been at an absolute standstill since the Revolution, has made its first move toward recovery. The keels of four new ships named after the Communist leaders Stalin, Zinovieff, Tomsky and Krassin, have been laid down in the Baltic Shipyard at Leningrad. Zinovieff swung the first hammer on the Stalin and made a speech as part of the ceremony of christening the ship.

The chief manager of the Baku oil-fields, Mr. Screbrovsky, has returned from America, where he placed some orders for new machinery. Mr. Serebrovsky expressed himself as enthusiastic over American methods, pointing out that in the American oil fields production costs are lower than in Russia, while wages are much higher. He believes that Russian oil has a great future in the international market and favors the immediate building of an improved pipeline from Baku to Batum, as well as the erection of a refining plant in Batum, as necessary steps in the development of the Russian oil

The arrival here of the Teplovoz, the new type of locomotive engine invented by the head-of the Russian Rail-road Mission in Germany, Professor Lomonossov, has aroused great interest. The Teplovoz is constructed along the lines of the Diesel engine, and experimental trips show that it required only a fourth as much oil for its work as the ordinary engine. 4 4

The value of the Russian exports for the last three months of 1924 was 70,000,000 rubles, as against 107,000,-000 for the same period last year. This reckoning is in pre-war prices, and the value of the exports in terms of present-day prices is considerably higher. The falling off is explained by the stopping of the grain exports. Other articles of export, notably chickens and eggs, showed substantial gains. 4 4 4

Abraham Lincoln is not without honor in Soviet Russia. A Communist calendar for 1925 notes Jan. 31, 1864, as the date of the abolition of slavery in America, It suggests as suitable names for children who may born on this day Abraham and Lincoln. + + +

The Russian Communist Party has shown a considerable increase in membership during the last year, and this is still more true of its affiliated junior organizations, the Communist Youth and the Young Pioneers Two hundred and fifty thousand new members, mostly factory workers, joined the party during this period bringing the membership up to about 650,000. Both the Communist Youth and the younger children's organization, the Young Pioneers, reached the figure of 1,000,000

The Bolshoi Theater, or Moscow State Opera House, celebrated the hundredth anniversary of its foundation on Feb. 1. The motto, "Art for the Toilers," predomi nated in the celebration, in which various artistic, labor nd military organizations took part. The Commissar Education, Lunacharsky, made a speech emphasizing the need for new forms of art which should spring from the depths of the people. The numerous telegrams of congratulation included messages from Fxodor Chaliapin and from the Paris Grand Opera. Mesdames Nezhanova the well-known soprano, and Geltzer, the famous ballet dancer, received the title People's Artists of the Republic. + + +

In connection with the anniversary, Lunacharsky published an article reviewing the history of the Opera House. During the nineteenth century the musical taste of the Moscow audience seems to have been at a low ebb.

The operas of Wagner and of the Russian composers were neglected, while inferior works held the center of attention. The establishment of a private opera company in which Chaliapin was one of the leading singers had a beneficial effect in freshening the repertory of the Bolshoi, and at the time of the war its performances could be considered quite creditable. Lunacharsky criticizes to some extent the present selections at the Bolshoi. lamenting the absence of the more important works of Moussorgsky, of the classical German composers, such as Mozart and Weber, and of Wagner, who is only represented by an occasional production of "Lohengrin.

The drive to encourage the co-operatives at the ex-pense of the private merchants which set in last spring and continued throughout the summer has had the effecof reducing the percentage of private capital employed in trade. Whereas the trade turnover in 1922-1923 was per cent, co-operatives 11.2 per cent, private traders 58.8 per cent, the percentages for 1923-1924 are: state trade 35, co-operatives 24.7 private trade 36. distributed in the following proportions: state trade 3 co-operatives 24.7, private traders 39.8. trade turnover for 1923-1924 was 5,300,000,000 rubles, an increase of 50 per cent over last year.

4 4 4 The Soviet Government has decided to grant certain definite privileges to the actors, artists, musiciens and authors who are honored with the title Deserving Artist of the Republic or the higher designation, People's Artist of the Republic. Deserving Artists are permitted to retire after thirty years of activity with a pension equal to the salary paid to state employees of the highest cate-The pension awarded to People's Artists is 112 times this figure. The children of those who have received these titles are to be freely admitted to all institutions of learning and educated at the expense of the Mikhail Vassilevitch Frunze, who has now been formally appointed Trotzky's successor as War Commissar is an old Communist whose record includes a capital sentence (commuted to penal servitude) under the Tsarist régime. During the civil war he distinguished himself several fronts, against Kolchak, against Wrangel. and in driving the Petlura and Makhno forces out the Ukraine. He was War Commissar for the Ukraine until the spring of 1924, when he was brought to Moscow as Trotzky's assistant. He has really been directing the affairs of the War Commissariat ever since that time.

More Regarding the Peace Movement

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR: After a careful reading of your splendid Peace Supplement, I want to suggest two more points for your consideration along the same lines:

First, how about the efficacy of the boycott, used against any belligerents who propose to break the peace has been a contention of mine, yet to be disproved. that the United States alone could have prevented the World War by giving notice on Aug. 1, 1914, to each one of the nations involved, that all trade with America (or any private concern in America) must cease until peace was restored. If no arms, or ammunition, or food, or merchandise had crossed the Atlantic at that time, the bellig-erents would have been forced to settle the dispute erents would have been forced to settle differently from the way in which they did.

Non-cooperation, is perhaps the better word. It would have been a slight matter for the American Government to have adjusted a few business losses to individual firms, caused by the temporary delay in shipments, compared to the huge waste and cost that was suffered. Naturally, such a policy would include the refusal of Secondly, how about putting a stop to this glorifying of war and war heroes in both textbooks and schools? As it is, the textbooks of each nation garble the truth to make out that their country is always right and the others are wrong. History and literature have magnified war heroes and ignored those who have blessed the world with peace-time gifts.

Children should be taught that war is a crime against humanity, on a par with murder, and patriotism should be redefined as character. The bravery that one reads about on the battle field is matched every day in the lives of humble citizens who do their duty and make their sacrifices without the accompaniment of drums and hu-
